Hi Jeannie,

I am forwarding this picture to you b/c the shower has been dry until yesterday so Kate took a picture to illustrate that there is a puddle in the shower. If the janitor isn't using this to fill and empty wash buckets then someone must be showering in there. The big push for the deadbolt from Grace & Ceci was that "anyone" can get the key from the mail box on the second floor and it seems that this must be happening b/c it's my understanding that the janitor has been restricted from the locker room. It was also my understanding that they were thinking of installing a combo type of lock for the door and each mother would have her own combo to gain access; with the partitions or curtains and the combo type lock this might work well. There is another mom in the building (I don't know her name but I have seen her with a pump bag and she has a birth announcement on her office door) that I know is pumping but I think that she has her own shared office that she must be able to use but if the office was unavailable to her at any time I imagine she would need to use the room so there really is a potential for a problem.

Kate recently heard of a situation @ Children's Hospital that there was a line of 5 mothers waiting to get into the only area designated to express and this is what we are hoping to avoid. Grace & Ceci did state a concern in one of the emails that as more mothers return to work there is an increased demand for the use of the room so I really don't understand the reasoning on making it single use.
